Petra and Ana are discussing politics:

Petra: They all sort of group together.

Ana: The workers.

Petra: Yeah, yeah. No, it was more than that because, like, it was just people felt run down.

Ana: Yeah.

Petra: They felt like that as though the system had screwed them over.

Ana: That's fair enough, yeah. That's cool, yeah.

Petra: Sort of like, that's why they blew up the credit card companies.

Ana: Oh, yeah, yeah.

Petra: Cos they were sick of er...

Ana: When he tried to blow those up.

Petra: Yeah, yeah, yeah. I guess it is revolution-style.

Maeve and Paul are discussing cars:

Maeve: A new car, newish car, wouldn't be too bad.

Paul: Sounds like some old wives' tale to me.

Maeve: Most old wives' tales are founded in some sort of old truth, aren't they?

Paul: Do you drive?

Maeve: No, I don't.

Paul: Do you know anything about cars?

Maeve: No, I don't.

Paul: Well, you stick to what you know then.

What do you think is conveyed by Maeve in the underlined text?

Gracie and Freya are discussing Freya's career:

Gracie: You wouldn't look for publishing? You'd move industry?

Freya: Apart from Manchester or like... Yeah, there's not much.

Gracie: Yeah.

Freya: So, I mean it'd have to be marketing.

Gracie: Yeah you'd change industry. I guess you could go into education.

Freya: Yeah, I suppose so. It's just the kind of thing that if you don't have a PGCE or experience of teaching, then that's a different...

Gracie: Would you like to go into teaching?

Freya: No, gosh no.

What do you think is conveyed by Gracie in the underlined text?

Khalid and Sally are discussing friendships:

Khalid: You don't have to be friends with people. End of sentence.

Sally: You don't have to be, yeah.

Khalid: You know? If you say "I don't really like them," why am I spending time with them?

Sally: Mm.

Khalid: Okay, like, you don't have to be everybody's friend.

Sally: Yeah.

Khalid: Mm.

Sally: I agree.

Khalid: And don't spend time with people just because the option's just there for you.

What do you think is conveyed by Khalid in the underlined text?

Steph and Marco are discussing technology:

Steph: I've got all my, all my documents are on the... er... two shilabyte? trialabyte? trilabyte?

Marco: Terabyte.

Steph: Two terabyte, terabyte.

Marco: Two terabytes.

Steph: External drive. I've got buy-one-get-one-free from Maplins.

Marco: Yeah.

Steph: And I really ought to copy that onto... I've got none of the other one, the free one.

Marco: No, if you've got one, that's fine.

Steph: No, but if that goes tits up...

Marco: Well, how many copy backups do you need? People only have one backup.

Steph: The external drive is my drive, it's not on the computer. I don't keep anything on the computer.

Marco: Why not?

Steph: I'm jolly lucky, cos if it had been all on the computer, I would have nothing now.

What do you think is conveyed by Steph in the underlined text?

Two friends are chatting about scientific struggles:

Samantha: They spend like a lifetime working on one little aspect, and they know everything about it and they've worked it all out in their head.

Tom: That's right.

Samantha: I mean, it would be a real bugger if someone came along and said, "Oh, sorry, I've just proved you wrong".... Oh, my lifetime's work...Which must happen.

Tom: That's gotta happen. Well, it did happen once or twice, didn't it? I mean...

Samantha: Yeah.

Tom: Somebody tried to prove Einstein's theory wrong, didn't they?

Samantha: Well, I don't think they tried to prove it wrong but they sort of like....

Tom: Well, they didn't prove it.

Leah and Simon are discussing their future plans:

Leah: Yeah, we'll see. I just want to go and have some adventures.

Simon: I don't blame you. You only live once, don't you? You're only on this planet for a certain amount of time. Just go and experience it and enjoy the time.

Leah: Mm-hm.

Simon: Perhaps have memories if you live long enough, if you don't at least you enjoyed yourself.

Leah: That's the idea.

Ramon and Carla are discussing some fashion choices:

Ramon: Well, you could have a wig?

Carla: What's wrong with being bald? Like, just 'cos the children don't have hair to pull on and play with, that's it?

Ramon: Wear a bobble hat for the next-

Carla: No.

Bob: I might get a wig or something, or go bald.

Carla: Shaving off my hair's giving me more freedom to do what I want with my hair, and just buy like bright pink wigs and stuff if I want to.

Ramon: So that's your sponsorship money gone.

What do you think is conveyed by Carla in the underlined text?

Ryan and Felicity are discussing the current cost of living:

Ryan: I'm so fucked off with the gas.

Felicity: I'm sorry though, that's good to know, and like you said, like things like using the George Foreman and stuff, we're hoping that will help us save some money too.

Ryan: Oh yeah, I'd rather do that.

Felicity: Mm.

Ryan: If I had an electric cooker.

Felicity: I mean, even so it should be cheaper anyway. We figured putting on an appliance like a George Foreman will cost less energy than heating up an entire cooker.

Ryan: Yeah.

Felicity: Even if they are both electric.

Ryan: It takes, what, five minutes to heat it up?

What do you think is conveyed by Felicity in the underlined text?

Alecia, Phil, and Ida are discussing each others' homes:

Alecia: Do you keep water in the fridge?

Phil: No.

Ida: No.

Alecia: Oh, you don't?

Phil: It's cold enough out the tap.

Ida: It's nice just being able to drink it out the tap. Water does taste different in different places though, doesn't it?

Alecia: Yeah, definitely.

Ida: It's different here to back at my mum's.

Alecia: It's even different, er, in different parts of England.

Phil: Yeah, that's what I mean.

Ethan: Mm.

Kevin: "Oh yeah of course, no worries."

Ethan: Yeah.

Kevin: Cos she's generous.

Ethan: Yeah.

Kevin: She's generous but she'll just never-

Ethan: She's just a bit scatty.

Kevin: Yeah.

Monica and Bill are discussing bachelor parties:

Bill: But I think there's certain things about it that I wouldn't like enforced, like that it has to be all male or all female.

Monica: Yeah, yeah.

Bill: So I don't really see the point of that, but I suppose that it's so strict these days.

Monica: It's supposed to be your last night of freedom, isn't it?

Bill: Um, but well that's the s- that's the s- that's s-

Monica: And like strippers and like inflatable body parts and just bad bad crack.

Bill: There's a few things where it's just sort of too much attention. Maybe you should just go for a good night out, but it shouldn't be forcing people to do things that they normally want to do, like dares and that, you know?

Helen and Daniel are discussing Daniel's father's job:

Helen: How many complaints does he get?

Daniel: It's quite a lot.

Helen: Is it auto-reply?

Daniel: Yeah, I mean it's a big restaurant. All big restaurants get complaints all the time, like it's completely normal.

Helen: Mm.

Daniel: It's part of the job. It's part of the thing and so you have like an email formula just so that you spend as little emotional energy on it as possible.

Helen: Mm.

Daniel: I think for the long term he would sort of... For ages, he found it really exhausting and would write an angry email but then delete it.

What do you think is conveyed by Daniel in the underlined text?

Annemarie and Charles are discussing health:

Annemarie: Yeah, the thing is, what you've got to do on a plane is to look after your body. That's the most important thing you've got to do.

Charles: Yeah, yeah, yeah.

Annemarie: And the only way you can do that is to drink as much water as possible.

Charles: Yeah.

Annemarie: Not too much water but-

Charles: No, no, no.

Annemarie: Just keep yourself hydrated. Flying at that altitude and drinking alcohol is like a kamikaze wish for me.

What do you think is conveyed by Annemarie in the underlined text?

Abbie and Xander are discussing motorbikes:

Abbie: There's this company who bought out the old Triumph.

Xander: Yeah.

Abbie: And sort of started off just making replacement parts and stuff like that.

Xander: Yeah.

Abbie: And then sort of slowly had one bike and then got some money from somewhere and redesigned the whole system.

Xander: Yeah.

Abbie: But they worked out the principle that they would make twins. I don't think they ma- no they don't make a single, they make twins, a triple, and a four-cylinder bike, you know, with different engines.

Xander: Yeah.

Abbie: You know these three different engines but nearly all the parts were interchangeable, like the pistons and the rods.

Jean: You know, if we weren't an island, then it would probably be easier to get over the border, you know what I mean?

Ed: Mm.

Jean: Here it's like, you have to get on a boat—

Ed: Well no, the agreement I'm thinking of is one where European citizens, they don't need a passport, do they? They have freedom of movement across borders.

Jean: Oh right, yeah.

Ed: But we didn't sign up to that, so that's why when we went to Italy we needed our passport. But other European countries going from there around Europe, they don't need to show their passport.

Bianca and Toby are discussing Bianca's recent trip:

Bianca: I find travelling west to east a lot worse than travelling we—

Toby: The other way.

Bianca: East to west.

Toby: Right.

Bianca: And so I basically lost four or five days with—

Toby: Jet lag.

Bianca: Jet lag. But it wasn't just the feeling of wanting to go to bed when everyone else was getting up and vice versa. It felt like all the bone marrow had been drained from my bones.

Toby: Oh really?

Bianca: I had no energy, just felt completely washed out.

Toby: Oh wow.

Rebecca and Katherine are discussing restaurants:

Rebecca: So there's no overheads for the food and they're not paying any staff fee, so if they're paying five pounds for that meal that's actual pure profit. Unlike a real restaurant, where probably the biggest expense is wages, and then the food itself. So that could actually be subsidising the other café where people can't afford to pay as much.

Katherine: True, but don't they have to rent premises to do this?

Rebecca: Mm yeah.

Katherine: Oh I mean that's massive.

Rebecca: So they do have that overhead.

Katherine: Yeah, that's a massive expense.

Rebecca: Plus the electricity and water.

Katherine: Mm, and there's no guaranteed levels of income here, you know.

What do you think is conveyed by Rebecca in the underlined text?

Tanya and Max are discussing job skills:

Tanya: For a lot of professions you need to be good at dealing with people.

Max: You've gotta be-

Tanya: But all our exams are about intellect and nothing to do with people.

Max: Yes, that's right.

Tanya: Cos we've never come up with a good system for measuring your capability with people.

Max: No.

Tanya: And a lot of jobs you need to be able to communicate, don't you?

Max: If you're in charge of a firm of any description you've gotta be able to get on well with people, otherwise you're in trouble.

What do you think is conveyed by Tanya in the underlined text?

Kai and Min are discussing car insurance:

Kai: Well, I guess the insurers don't care because what they lose on the male's paying they'll just add to the female's bills.

Min: But it won't mean the males will pay any less, it just means that females will pay the same.

Kai: Really?

Min: Uh-huh.

Kai: Oh, they were probably laughing all the way to the bank then. That's probably why they didn't fight it.

Min: Oh yeah, there's no reduction for the men's charge. It just means that the women's goes up to match the men's.

Kai: We don't know if that's the truth.

Min: We do. Well, we'll see, but there's no way of telling and you have to shop around as well for insurance.

Tom: Should have tried it when we were in America. The thing is though, there's so many varieties, aren't there? There's like, crunchy, smooth, thick, thin...

Em: There's a couple of girls who eat it on nights on tour.

Nina: It's supposed to be good for you, isn't it?

Harry, Jose, and Susie are discussing cooking:

Harry: You shouldn't salt beef.

Jose: What do you mean, you should salt beef?

Harry: Before you cook it because all the water - all the juices leech out of it.

Jose: You salt and pepper, don't you?

Susie: Apparently, yeah, like joints of beef and stuff like that.

Harry: Any beef I've been told.

Susie: Yeah, but any dish you salt...

Jose: Like er shoulder, if you like salt a shoulder before you put it in the oven.

Harry: That's different, but if you're say frying pieces of beef or stir-fried beef or something, you shouldn't salt it.

Jose: I wouldn't salt a steak before frying it because it makes it dry, doesn't it?

Harry: Yeah, because it draws out all the water.

Susie: I don't salt my steaks, no.

What do you think is conveyed by Harry in the underlined text?

Madeline and Katy are discussing the weather:

Madeline: Don't know. Anyway, it's going to be hot, hot, hot.

Katy: Yeah.

Madeline: And I'm going to be wearing more clothes.

Katy: Yeah, well that's going to be a bit of a shock to the system, isn't it?

Dina and George are talking about online dating:

Dina: Er, that's probably just a bad photo. He's squinting into the camera, no one's attractive when they're squinting.

George: Look at me, as if it's gonna make it be any clearer. See this, however, is a cute face, so you never know!

Dina: Mm mm.

George: You never know the truth.

Dina: No, but it's worth speaking to him. If you already have chatted quite a lot, it's worth meeting him. How long is he back for?

Maddie and Charlie are discussing crime and punishment:

Maddie: I'm thinking there must be an alternative to slapping someone behind bars.

Charlie: Mm.

Maddie: Because the rate at which inmates are going into prison is far higher than the rate of releases, so.

Charlie: Yes, and the reoffending rate is.

Maddie: Is really high.

Charlie: Very, very high.

Maddie: Yes, so it doesn't take a rocket scientist to work out that unless we build more prisons this whole system is gonna crumble.

Camille: You don't have to stick with one job for the rest of your life, do you?

Matt: I know but they might all be boring. I don't know I might like working. I think it's probable that I'll enjoy working more than I've enjoyed my education.

Matt: Of course there is.

Iris: Is there?

Matt: Because you can go into anything.

Iris: Like what?

Matt: Well, anything that's not science, and you can just get additional training for anything, but to be a philosopher, like—

Mary: No, no I didn't hear anything. I kind of stayed up for a little bit, actually. Phoebe was up—I don't know why she was up, cos we normally go to bed at ten thirty, but she was still up at midnight.

Eve: Mmm.

Mary: And her friend pulled out so she's on her own all weekend, so I feel a little bit bad about that.

Eve: Well, you shouldn't feel bad because you aren't the one who's let her down, it's her friend who has.

Mary: Yeah, and I mean, she went home when I—er, she left me on my own for a few days, didn't she? When she came out, she'll be fine, she's got plenty of work to do, so.

Stephen and Wade are discussing gaming:

Stephen: Did you say you were gonna show me chess?

Wade: Yes, er, Chinese chess, yeah.

Stephen: You've got the actual board, haven't you?

Wade: Yeah, I've got the board, yeah, but it'll be easier to show you on the iPad.

Stephen: Why is that?

Wade: Because you can keep going backwards and forwards and showing... it'll take the move back and it'll show you how it's moving.

Stephen: Oh, okay.

Wade: I mean, I can show you physically, but you'll see it on that 'cos it's easier.

Stephen: Okay, give it a try... You say you can win against the computer sometimes?

Wade: I can easy. I've only ever beaten it once at normal, probably over about five hundred games.

Stephen: Do we, on the iPad, do we play against each other then, or what?

Wade: No, you play against the computer.

What do you think is conveyed by Wade in the underlined text?

Chrissy and Tay are discussing a holiday Tay is taking:

Chrissy: Do they have Wi-Fi?

Tay: They don't have Wi-Fi. Unless you're near the main house.

Chrissy: Aha.

Tay: So you can go to the main house and get Wi-Fi, and then in theory the log cabin has an Ethernet cable, but I took my computer one time and plugged it in and it didn't work, so...

Chrissy: Oh, okay.

Tay: And then it's got a little wood burner, and that's the only heating. Water is alright, the shower has a boiler where you don't touch a thing. Don't change the temperature, do nothing, and you should get warm water.

Chrissy: Right, erm, that's funny.

What do you think is conveyed by Tay in the underlined text?

Murphy and Leo are discussing their views on London:

Murphy: I lived in London for about six months and didn't like how vast it was.

Leo: How old were you? Was that a long time?

Murphy: Ah, it was, it was when I was eighteen, sorry, eighteen years ago.

Leo: It's interesting cos I used to work for Helen.

Murphy: Aha.

Leo: A long time ago. And I worked at their office for about six months actually, and I hated London.

Murphy: Really?

Leo: With a passion. I think it's just dirty. I think it's the loneliest place on the planet, where so many people seem to be around.

Murphy: Yeah, yeah.

What do you think is conveyed by Leo in the underlined text?

Tristan and Lila are discussing broken technology:

Lila: You've got all these forms to print and I need to get my visa forms filled in and stuff like that.

Tristan: We had a whole session, cos the same happened with me, did mum tell you? With the Sonos system.

Lila: Yeah, I think you told me.

Tristan: And they suggested it was aligning the name of the extender and just giving it the same name as the router, which I did, but it didn't seem to solve the problem.

Lila: I've got a techy friend that we can consult over this.

Tristan: Good.

Lila: We always have these problems in retreats and various locations.

Tristan: Yes, I can imagine.

Lila: And he always solves them.

Becca and Uma are discussing Uma's job as a teacher:

Becca: What was that last semester?

Uma: I had erm yeah about seventeen.

Becca: What, two thousand words?

Uma: Yeah.

Becca: Oh my god.

Uma: Had about seventy-five to mark.

Becca: Mmm.

Uma: Plus individual comments for each one.

Becca: Mmm.

Uma: Plus then putting the grades into the computer.

Becca: Mmm oh.

Alice and Emma are arguing:

Alice: I mean you're still accusing me of sleeping with Tim and that's bizarre.

Emma: No, okay, alright, let's leave that now for now.

Alice: And I don't know how many times I can tell you the same thing.

Emma: Okay.

Alice: And I told you to speak to him.

Emma: Okay, I'm sorry.

Alice: But you think we've got some kind of conspiracy theory going on.

Emma: I'm sorry, okay.

Alice: Where we've worked out some story that we'll lie to you. And you know, for what purpose I'm not quite sure.

Emma: Can I just say what I was gonna say?

Miguel and Brigitte are discussing some documentaries Brigitte watched recently:

Brigitte: The first one was looking at the effects on health and the second one was looking at the effects on the environment.

Miguel: Ah mm.

Brigitte: And to me, it was very impressive because-

Miguel: I heard about this.

Brigitte: It wasn't saying 'xyz', it was talking to lots of different people who have done different studies and some of them contradicted each other, you know.

Miguel: Mm.

Brigitte: And quite a lot of it was "well actually we don't we're not quite sure about this yet."

Miguel: Right.

Brigitte: But the general consensus was, the planet would be better if more people ate more vegetables and fewer less meat.

Miguel: Yeah yeah yeah.

Brigitte: And most people's health would be better if they ate less meat than they do.

What do you think is conveyed by Brigitte in the underlined text?

Vanessa and Lotte are discussing Vanessa's job:

Vanessa: I had no office hours, so when I finished teaching I went home. Which meant sometimes my teaching blocks were lovely. I came in and did from nine till twelve and then I'm done for the day. And you know I've got planning to do but I can sit in my pants at home on the computer.

Lotte: Yeah.

Vanessa: And do it.

Lotte: Yeah.

Vanessa: So I like that freedom.

Lotte: Yeah.

Vanessa: And the responsibility I had! I had to completely grade them. I had to observe them. I had to make up the exams for the classes. I had to write the exams and then mark the exams and do speaking exams as well as written exams. So I give them a grade that goes towards their final mark.

Alison, Carol, and Brian are discussing their recent holiday:

Alison: Which country is it close to?

Brian: Er oh dear. I really don't know dear I'm not that well up on that part of Europe.

Alison: Right, we'll have to get an atlas.

Carol: Steve might have it, he'll get it on the-

Two close friends are talking about philosophers:

Jordan: How can they sleep at night?

Sam: Yeah I know.

Jordan: Like, "this bed is not real."

Jordan: That's why I would never ever want to be a philosopher.

Jordan: Yeah.

Sam: But then again it might be quite satisfying.

Jordan: I mean, that's just like the simple stuff. That was literally in our first lecture to get us introduced to it, and then after that it was all just, like, theory.

Sam: Mm.

Jordan: And it was so confusing like you don't even know.

Deepthi and Marcus are discussing what they learnt about physics in primary school:

Marcus: Mercury, Venus, Earth, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Neptune

Deepthi: What were you doing, in terms of planets?

Marcus: Well she just wanted us to remember.

Deepthi: But why?

Marcus: I don't know.

Deepthi: When I was little we also learnt Pluto but they've got rid of that now. They said it was too small to be a planet.

Marcus: Pluto?

Deepthi: I was alive when it was.

Marcus: It was when you were born, Pluto?

Deepthi: It was thought of as a planet.

Cecelia and Richard are discussing some cultural differences:

Cecelia: You still want to look at the way China has increased its economic growth because of the—

Richard: That's the mentality as much as anything else.

Cecelia: I think it's as much to do with the work ethic as it has to do with encouraging people to make inventions.

Richard: Yeah, I know, but the point is that they invested in their people.

Cecelia: Yeah, by forcing them to work, by controlling them, by giving them hard hours.

Richard: I mean, yeah, I know, but think about the amount of freedom they have now compared to fifty years ago, yeah?

Cecelia: Yeah, okay.

Richard: Obviously, they're still... It's not perfect. You still have a communist regime and you can't talk out against it.

Afra and Kim are talking about Afra's hobbies:

Afra: I used to do a lot of it, but I just got out of it.

Kim: What's the reiki? What's that? Afra: It's like, it works on the same principles as reflexology, really. You're helping to channel energy through the body via your hands.

Kim: Mmm.

Afra: So you can either place your hands on the recipient directly, or you can just raise them above.

Kim: Oh, right.

Afra: And, erm, oh, you just feel the heat that comes out.
